

Christopher Nolan tells Entertainment Weekly that while he is excited to be showing the prologue, but he is also nervous since the film isn't finished. He gladly proclaims that The Dark Knight Rises will have twice as much IMAX footage as compared to the last Batman movie. Where as The Dark Knight had twenty-five minutes worth of IMAX footage, Rises could have as much as fifty minutes. That isn't set in stone of course as Nolan has to finish editing the film. The extra IMAX footage isn't just from having more action scenes. In fact Nolan is doing quite a bit of experimenting with the medium by using it in intimate and dramatic scenes. Which is something most director wouldn't dream of doing since the IMAX cameras are a notoriously loud contraption. I did catch one moment, when someone asks Bane if he'll die should his now widely seen mask be
