

Chronicle knocked out The Woman in Black over the Super Bowl weekend to take the top spot and exceeded industry expectations. The film, directed by the much talked about director Josh Trank, took in $22 million in its first three days. It is currently setting at 85% on Rotten Tomatoes. With all the success, a sequel is of course going to be talked about. The film's three stars Dane DeHaan, Alex Russell and Michael B. Jordan spoke on the potential for a sequel, while hedging their bets they did leave the door open. Get More: Movie Trailers, Movies Blog DeHaan I just hope people like the movie and leave the movie wanting more. Hopefully if we leave people wanting more then we can think about what comes next. Russell doesn't want anyone to get their hopes too high I think there's potential for it to go in many different directions after the lights go
