

Well, here's something to take you into the weekend. The official Power Rangers Twitter account has released a first look image at the Megazord toy, fully-assembled, from the upcoming Dean Israelite-directed reboot and while it's likely to look a little different once the full effects are rendered on-screen, the photo does offer a pretty good idea at what to expect when the real thing is revealed. The new Megazord is quite a departure from the classic Megazord, seen in the original 1993 Mighty Morphin series, but does bear a few distant similarities with the Ninja Megazord utilized in the 1995 movie. However, just like the previous iterations, this one also looks to be made up of the Rangers' five Dinozords with the Tyrannosaurus dinozord making up most of the body, the Sabre-Toothed Tiger dinozord forming the core, the Triceratops & Mastodon dinozords combining to form the legs, and the Pteryodactyl dinozord transforming into the head. The collectible figure, which is said to be one

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/action/come-get-your-first-look-at-the-power-rangers-movie-megazord-fully-a146542>