

After the announcement that Bryan Hitch would leave Marvel Comics after nearly a decade of service, many were left wondering what the artist's next move would be. Although there's still a day left until the countdown on his Twitter account reaches an end, earlier today both he and writer Jonathan Ross revealed their upcoming project America's Got Powers. "Am beyond excited to announce that Bryan Hitch and I are publishing new comic with Image this spring," Ross told his followers. "'America's Got Powers'. Full on superhero angst and action as America's most gifted superpowered teen wannabes slug it out on TV for a place in the worlds only official super-team." Hitch revealed the same thing, confirming that the official first story and artwork will be revealed tomorrow. Bleeding Cool has seemingly managed to get a few more details about the story, which you can check out below. The comic tells the story of Tommy,

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Jolt17/news/?a=52150&t=COMICS_Bryan_Hitch_Announces_AMERICAS_GOT_POWERS