

Bleeding Cool have come across some very interesting information about the status of the much talked about Watchmen prequels. Before now, all we knew was that original artist Dave Gibbons (who will soon be working with Mark Millar and Matthew Vaughn on The Secret Service) would be somehow involved in the sure to be controversial comics, despite writer Alan Moore having no interest in working on the project with DC. Well, here's an excerpt from a report the site have run, and you can find more by clicking on the link below. I was told before New York Comic Con that it might be back on and that DC were drawing up a wishlist of creators for a series of Watchmen prequel comics.. Well, I've now heard a lot more. Darwyn Cooke's name is at the very top, linked to drawing two mini-series and writing another, followed by the likes of JMS,

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=48520&t=COMICS_DC_May_Still_Be_Moving_Ahead_With_iWatchmen_iPrequels_JMS_And_More_Attached