

Wired reveal that DC Comics will release a new 48-page ongoing series called National Comics this July. The series will feature one off tales in each issue. These will focus on DC's most obscure and strange characters with different creators taking the reigns every month. The first will see Jeff Lemire and Cully Hammer kicking things off with National Comics: Kid Eternity #1. Subsequent issues will feature Madame X, Rose and Thorn, and Looker. Of course, this leaves us with one very pertinent question. Which book is being cancelled for National Comics to replace? Either that, or the New 52 is about to become the New 53... After being given a second chance on life, he finds himself with the ability to resurrect the dead. Freeman uses his new ability to help those he resurrects to find their murderers and to gain closure, so they can continue to the other side.

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=57623>