

Talking to British newspaper, Metro, writer Grant Morrison has talked a little more about his plans for a fresh take on Superman in September's Action Comics #1. While we'd already heard rumblings that the title would focus on the early years of the Man of Steel, Morrison confirms below that he'll be offering a very unique take on the character which takes him back to his roots AND out of the iconic costume. What have you got lined up in your writing for Superman?

I want to solve some of the problems that have grown up around the character. People now ask: 'Why the hell would he dress up like that?' I want to make Superman a more contemporary character. We'll be changing how he looks, dresses and behaves. He'll be more like the Superman who appeared in 1938 – more socially active and a champion of the oppressed. He's taken his underpants off

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=41628&t=COMICS_Grant_Morrison_Spills_Some_Details_On_His_New_Interpretation_Of_Superman