

It's no wonder that a lot of fans have responded with "Who?!" to most of the recent Marvel NOW! creative team announcements. The publisher (and DC to a lesser extent) have seemingly alienated a lot of A-List talent over the past few years as some of their best known writers and artists have left to focus on creator owned work. Well, you can add another casualty to the list as Greg Rucka has revealed in an interview with Mark Millar's CLiNT (helpfully transcribed by Bleeding Cool) why he no longer has any interest in lending his writing talents to Marvel OR DC. You can read more by clicking on the link at the bottom of this page. I've reached the end of my Work For Hire rope. I'm enjoying The Punisher, but that's not mine, it's Marvel's, and I knew that going in. I have spent a lot of my comics

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=67563>