

The most recent arc in writer Brian Michael Bendis' New Avengers ("Infinity") included flashbacks by Howard Chaykin of the President tasking war hero Nick Fury with the "Avengers Initiative." This saw him putting together a team consisting of characters like Kraven the Hunter and Sabretooth for covert missions, the first of which was taking down a secret Nazi group who had created their own twisted version of Captain America. Later this year, Chaykin will return to 1959 with a series further exploring the teams exploits. To read the full report and interview, head on over to Comic Book Resources by clicking on the link at the bottom of the page. On The Different Portrayal Of Nick Fury In The Series: "What it is about Fury that I like, is that he really is a guy who is old enough to have genuinely experienced the horror of the Second World War and young enough

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=40036&t=COMICS_Marvel_Announced_iAvengers_1959i_By_Howard_Chaykin