

When both THOR and Captain America: The First Avenger were released, both of their respective comics received new #1 issues. When Spider-Man 3 hit the big screen, his comic book counterpart was suddenly "Back In Black". You see, whenever Marvel release a new movie, they capitalize on that by allowing it to affect the comic books in order to draw in new readers. Well, according to Scott Snyder in a recent interview with Hero Complex, we shouldn't get our hopes up for DC doing the same. On Whether We Should Expect To See Any Sort Of Crossover Due To The Dark Knight Rises: No. Not at all. DC really lets us do stories we want to do, pretty much. I don't have any initiative from DC or Warner to include those characters. You won't see Bane. And I'm really not sure if you're going to see Catwoman, either, honestly. We're really just trying

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=47126&t=COMICS_Scott_Snyder_Reveals_Whether_We'll_See_Bane_And_Catwoman_In_Batman_Due_To_TDKR