

We already know a little about the status quo of the Marvel Comics Universe following the events of Civil War II, and everything indicates that Tony Stark is not going to be in the picture - but, does that mean he won't survive? All of the marketing up until now definitely seems to be teasing that outcome, but I think it's a little too obvious myself. At any rate, thanks to IGN we have a look at the cover of issue #8, which is due out in December and will be the final installment in this latest event. The image shows Stark's Iron Man helmet lying on the ground, looking like pretty much every other character involved in the battle has had a crack at it. "There are many people who look at that cover and read whatever they want to read into it no matter what I say," writer Brian Micahle Bendis told IGN. "I have decided to get very zen about

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/comics/marvel_comics/comics-the-cover-to-the-final-issue-of-civil-war-ii-teases-a146630