

DC Comics has just made the announcement that Jim Lee's WildStorm Universe is returning, with Warren Ellis plotting the overarching direction of the new line. Ellis will write the main title of the imprint and oversee general plot threads on spin-off titles. The flagship title, called The WildStorm will debut this February, written by Ellis and drawn by Jon Davis-Hunt. Ellis tells Comicbook.com, "After long reflection, I couldn't turn down the invitation to renovate the house that Jim Lee built, and refit its unique combination of cosmic paranoia and paramilitary conspiracy for the post-political space madness of the twenty-teens. Looking back to look forward." In addition to The WildStorm, other titles in the works include Michael Cray, WildC.A.T.S. and Zealot. The creative teams for these titles have not been announced at this time. You can check out a few art samples/character studies from Davis-Hunt below. Are you excited by the relaunch of WildStorm? Let us know in the comment section.

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/comics/dc_comics/comics-the-wildstorm-universe-is-returning-with-warren-ellis-in-a145681