

It looks like the planned Dune reboot has found a heck of a director. Following an initial report from last month, Brian Herbert (son of author Frank Herbert) has officially confirmed that Denis Villeneuve has signed in to bring his father's sweeping sci-fi epic to the big screen for Legendary Pictures. It's official -- Legendary Pictures has signed the very talented Denis Villeneuve to direct the exciting new DUNE series film project. — Brian Herbert (@DuneAuthor) February 1, 2017 Villeneuve's name was recently brought up as a potential replacement for Ben Affleck on The Batman, and although there is always a slim chance he could tackle that project once he's wrapped on Dune, one would assume this takes him out of the picture - if he was ever really in it in the first place, that is. There have been several different adaptations of Dune over the years, the most famous (or infamous, depending on your perspective) is David Lynch's ambitious but flawed 1984 movie

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/sci-fi/confirmed-arrival-director-denis-villeneuve-will-helm-the-dune-reboot-for-a148594>