

The CW has released the description for Legends of Tomorrow's fifth episode, and it sounds like we can expect to see the team once again squaring off with Arrow season four villain Damien Darhk. How has he managed to weasel his way into the White House? That remains to be seen, but chances are this has something to do with whatever the Reverse-Flash (now alive thanks to Flashpoint) is up to. It also appears as if the 1980s set episode - titled "Compromised" - is going to feature some shocking revelations about the Justice Society of America, a team who debuted in tonight World War II set instalment. What's happened to them? That too is something we'll just have to wait and see about, but for now, feel free to leave your thoughts and theories on these latest details in the comments section.
