

Speaking to Collider, Damon Lindelof - who is involved in such upcoming projects such as Prometheus and the untitled Star Trek sequel - talks in detail about both projects. He says that his work on Trek 2 is now full-time (and J.J. Abrams is working hard on the film now as well), explaining that they want to make the sequel the way they did the first film. He also says that Prometheus is being designed 'to make people think', and comments briefly on working with director Ridley Scott. He's asked if he would ever do a Star Wars related project if asked, as well as whether or not he'd be involved in a future Star Trek TV show. Here's the run-down of the video if you don't feel like watching it: :50 – If he was asked to do Star Wars, would he do it 3:25 – How much times does he think

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=42869&t=Damon_Lindelof_Talks_IPrometheusi_IStar_Treki_Sequel_And_More