

Although the long-awaited Fox-distributed project is years away, famed Chronicle helmer Josh Trank is still signed on to direct the reboot of Marvel's First Family, the Fantastic Four. And after learning this while doing press for his upcoming “prohibition-era gangster film,” Lawless, rising Chronicle star Dane DeHaan discussed possibly reuniting with Trank for the forthcoming superhero film, Hollywood Outbreak reports. “Thank you, you should publish that,” DeHaan jokingly responded after a journalist told him he'd make a great Human Torch. “My guilty pleasure is superhero movies, I love superhero movies,” he admits. “I think a lot of them are really actually great movies. A lot of times people say ‘Oh [they're all] the same thing.’ For instance, like Spider-Man; I've seen that superhero movie before, a lot. But, it wasn't necessarily anything new to me, but I thought they did it so well and it was such a human story.

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=66200>