

A few months ago, it was announced that Edge of Tomorrow director Doug Liman would be helming Justice League Dark, which is now officially titled Dark Universe. Liman will be working off a script written by Guillermo del Toro, the film's original director, and it's been confirmed that the film will be a part of the current DC Film Universe. While talking to IGN, Liman spoke about his approach to the film and how he plans to bring something new to the comic book movie genre. &quot;Yeah, I mean first of all, I love those characters, and I love Warner Bros., and I love [producer] Scott Rudin, and it's -- and you know, I get asked to come in and do things that are "unconventional." If people want conventional, they don't come to me. It's why doing Invisible was like right up my alley -- because how can you be conventional when there aren't even conventions that exist? And so you know when

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/justice\_league/dark-universe-director-doug-liman-says-he-will-turn-the-comic-book-a146354