

Last we heard about Darren Aronofsky's upcoming epic Noah (based on the classic Biblical story of Noah's ark and also on a graphic novel), Russell Crowe (Gladiator, Man Of Steel) was confirmed to star in the title role. Now, Paramount Pictures and New Regency has set a March 28th, 2014 release date for the film, which begins production in July. Liam Neeson was supposedly being looked at for another larger role shortly before Crowe began negotiations, possibly for a villainous role. There's currently no word on whether or not he will be involved with the movie though. Aronofsky and Ari Handel worked on the script, with John Logan re-writing.
