

As fans of the time-travelling mutant badass will be well aware, Cable has quite a head-melting, arguably overly-complicated origin story. Since the Merc with a Mouth revealed that the character was going to make his big-screen debut in the sequel during the post-credits scene of Deadpool, we've all been wondering how this would be addressed. Well, turns out it won't be! Collider caught up with the film's screenwriters to quiz them about how they plan on handling Cable, and Paul Wernick had the following response: "So with Cable, he's got such a convoluted past, and such a convoluted origin story that I think we're going to try to leave that, not mysterious, but there are a lot of twists and turns, cloning and all this stuff where you go, "Oh my God. How do we get that across in a two hour movie?" I think we're going to distill him down to his essence. It will be authentic and faithful, but it's

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/deadpool/deadpool-2-writers-reveal-that-cable-s-convoluted-origin-story-wont-be-a148162>