

Denis Leary didn't always love the character he is going to be chasing July 3. Leary, who will play Captain George Stacy, was introduced to Spider-Man later in life and has grown to like Spider-Man's everyman vibe. Speaking with the LA Times, Leary explains how Spider-Man is an easy character to identify with. I never read Spider-Man comics as a kid. I was always more of a Batman guy. But my wife has always loved the Spider-Man character and found the working class ethos, the young teenager turning into a man melodrama and his orphan back story intriguing — as did I once she'd introduced me to the series. He's far from a billionaire and he's born of this world — it's easy to struggle to identify with. Leary has since done plenty of research on the comic book front, and when asked what his favorite part of the vast Spidey mythology
