

The Avengers wrapped shooting in Cleveland a few months ago and then moved on to New York before finally wrapping. While in Cleveland, set photos and videos emerged on a daily basis sparking instant analysis and debate on the internet. Many were worried that the movie was being spoiled by the onslaught of material that fans managed to capture. Well according to Cincinnatti.com, Joss Whedon managed to shoot for nearly two weeks in a location far away from the prying eyes of fans. While the city was whipped in a frenzy about casting calls for extras, Whedon was hard at work filming scenes while they were distracted. The production apparently shot at Wilmington Air Park for two weeks and apparently wanted to blow stuff up. "They asked if there was anything they could demolish, and we said no," said Kevin Carver, Clinton County Port Authority executive director. Cincinatti.com goes on

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=47861&t=Details_About_Secret_Filming_Location_Revealed_For_emThe_Avengersem