

As a kid, I can remember going to the local drugstore every week in eager anticipation of picking up the latest issue of my favorite comics. My father—who was a postman at the time—encouraged me to subscribe to my favorite comics however, I would not be deterred. I had developed a regular routine and would hear nothing of changing it. In my teens I discovered something which changed my outlook completely, my local comic store. I was awestruck by the idea of being in a store which sold nothing but comics and comic book themed paraphernalia. It was almost too much for this fanboy to take. The high school I attended was located on the north side in a local village, and tucked away along a side street three blocks from the school was the store which would change the way in which I'd buy my comics!

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MediaManForum/news/?a=52311&t=Digital_Comics_A_New_Way_to_Read_Comics