

Source: MTV MTV News briefly spoke with Mangold about "The Wolverine" during an interview about the Blu-ray release of "Cop Land," and the director was more than up for discussing his work with Jackman on a Wolverine that's "more intense than we've ever seen him." "I was just really intrigued by the script and the project and the boldness of making a really personal Wolverine movie," Mangold said while assuring fans that the "serious action" is still very much there. Umm, one thing the Wolverine didn't really have was the serious action, especially when it came time for people to use their mutant powers. Agent Zero gliding/jumping/teleporting over that fence had to be one of the worst SFX sequences I've ever seen in a movie. But moving back to Mangold, he goes on to state, "But it's also more of a journey for the character in a completely foreign

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=49155&t=Director_emJames_Mangoldem_On_emThe_Wolverineem_And_emHugh_Jackmanem