

While promoting The Expendables 2 Dolph Lundgren was interviewed by the Huffington Post and asked if there were any young actors that he thought would be a good fit for the role of He-Man. It came out this week that there might be a new "Masters of the Universe" movie. Who would you pick to take over as He-Man? Well, let's see. You need somebody who's well built and charming, I suppose. And he can deliver a couple of lines of dialogue, I guess more than I had [laughs]. I mean, Channing Tatum? I don't know. I don't know that many young actors. But he's got a pretty good body. He's got a naturally athletic body which you need, unless you make the guy wear a suit, like Batman. But if you need real muscles, you need somebody who is built. What about Chris Hemsworth? Yeah! That's a good idea. That's a cool idea, yeah. So

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/nailbiter111/news/?a=65866>