

Olivia Thirlby may not be on your radar at this point, but she is started to getting bigger and better roles of late. You might recognize her from Juno, when she played Ellen Page's best friend, who flirted endlessly with over-the-hill teachers. Or, you might recognize her from United 93, which I like to refer to as the movie that had no business being made so soon. Little long, and not so catchy of a title, but much more honest. Anywho, she is starring in The Darkest Hour, which is opening up Christmas Day. Hmmm, let's see stay at home and open presents, get wasted on some sweet eggnog, or go to the movie theaters to see another alien invasion movie? Hmmm that is quite the quandary. Truly a toss-up. I'll have to consult my magic eight ball on that one. So you've got 'The Darkest Hour' and the 'Dredd' coming
