

Though we've known Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson would play the villainous Black Adam in the Shazam movie for a while now, there hasn't really been any movement on the project since. However, the following image posted to Henry Cavill's Instagram could be considered an update of sorts. Both men met up for a drink, and Cavill shared the pic by way of a Christmas greeting to their fans - but the accompanying text would seem to suggest that they are also discussing their futures in the DC Films Universe, and more specifically, Shazam. Does this confirm that we will see Superman in the movie after all? That might be getting ahead of ourselves a little, but it's definitely a possibility.

Merry Christmas a Happy New Year from Superman and Black Adam @therock . Today we drink like gentleman and come together as friends. We're excited for what the future brings.. #DangerousGentleman
#DCWorldsCollide #Superman A photo posted by Henry Cavill (@henrycavill) on Dec
25, 2016 at 11:20am

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/shazam/dwayne-the-rock-johnson-and-henry-cavill-meet-up-for-a-christmas-drink-a147709>