

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/6of13/news/?a=28842&t=EDITORIAL\_How\_Should\_Warner\_Brothers\_Approach\_a\_JLA\_Movie\_With\_a\_Unified\_DC\_Universe

If a unified DC universe is like a boat, then a Justice League of America movie is the engine and solo movies for each league member are the fuel that drives it. The JLA movie is more wishful thinking rather than being an actuality. At this point, we don't even know if Warner Brothers still has any plans for a JLA movie. Also, even with motivation for the project, their DC franchises seem so disconnected that we wonder exactly how a JLA can make the jump to the big screen. Given their vast potential, why exactly WB has not decided to create a linked DC universe of films seems like a wasted opportunity. Marvel is taking strides forward with their assortment of movies leading up to The Avengers. Could WB be standing back just to gauge the success or failure of The Avengers enterprise? Despite the progress of Marvel Studios, WB should