

At first when Bane was announced as the villain, everyone was...a bit taken aback. We all knew at that moment that regardless of whatever villain cropped up in the final film, that Nolan wouldn't disappoint. At least, most of us thought that. I know I did. There were times when my interest in Bane lowered, But for the most part my faith in the character before seeing the film never withered. I noticed Tom Hardy's performance in the movie Bronson (which, if you haven't seen, I strongly recommend watching it soon) and I was absolutely sure that Hardy would be a flawless and terrifying Bane. I made a few articles and countless comments, showing my support of Nolan's decision to include Bane, and sometimes encountered backlash from fans who wished for a different villain to give Batman hell in the final installment. Everybody kept wondering about Bane's appearance, and if Hardy
