

Among the various DC Comics projects that Warner Bros. have been developing over the years is The Flash. Last we heard on the movie, Green Lantern scribes Michael Green and Marc Guggenheim were working on the script. With the Justice League movie likely being the Fastest Man Alive's big screen debut, WB will probably release a solo Flash spin-off if the DC assembly is successful enough. The Flash is a tricky character to get right on the big screen. Despite rumors that it'll be a darker take on the Scarlet Speedster, I'd prefer if the film was a full-on action comedy. Below, I have listed six (err, seven) directors who I think are capable of doing The Flash justice in his first movie. Chris Miller/Phil Lord 21 Jump Street The directing duo released their surprise hit action comedy reboot 21 Jump Street earlier this year, proving that they're experienced enough in the genre to

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=66293>