

To many comic book fans, a live action Justice League film has merely been a dream. Lately, however, Warner Bros. have been interested in finally getting the project off the ground. After hiring Gangster Squad writer Will Beall to pen the script last year, it was recently reported that WB were eyeing Ben Affleck (The Town) to direct the DC Comics team up film. Due to conflicting reports, it's currently unknown whether or not Affleck would be interested in directing the movie. If he passes (which wouldn't be surprising), then there are other directors who should be considered (click here to check out my editorial on who should direct Justice League). We should (hopefully) be hearing more news on the ambitious project soon. As a lifelong Justice League fan (I watched the animated series as a youngling), I don't think there's a movie that I'm anticipating more than the first

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=65896>