

Hey all, I re-watched Captain America earlier, and thought to myself, this could have been sooo much better. Red Skull was one of the shittiest villain's I've seen in a CBM. It wasn't thought-provoking or anything. A good movie, nothing more. You're probably wondering why I'm talking trash about a good movie. I'd just like to address the Marvel VS DC war for a sec, as it's how I need to start the Editorial. What people fail to realise is that there are 2 types of CBM. There's the fun, action-orientated ones that aren't meant to make you think about themes and deeper meaning's. And there are the one's with all that. Some examples of the former are Thor, Iron Man 2, Captain America, X-Men and Spider-Man, while some examples of the latter are Batman Begins, The Dark Knight, X-Men: First Class and V for Vendetta. Obviously not everybody wants to have to

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MovieMaster/news/?a=51944&t=EDITORIAL The Problem With MARVEL STUDIOS