

In the wake of Ben Affleck's struggles on hammering out a script for his standalone Batman movie, is it possible that the current treatment/outline could be completely thrown out? If so, could that lead to a reduced role for Deathstroke or might the mercenary be removed from the film altogether? The DCEU is currently navigating its way through choppy waters and while they certainly have a big enough vessel to cut through some sizable waves, it's not out of the realm of possibility that the ship capsizes. In looking over how the Batman drama has unfolded over the last few weeks, combined with what's happening on The Flash, Warner Bros. just might be willing to throw Affleck's script out the window and start from scratch as they search for the right tone for their cinematic universe. Perhaps the biggest factor in deciding what happens to Joe Manganiello's Deathstroke is whether or not the character appears in Justice League. When the footage of Slade

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/batman/editorial-what-happens-to-joe-manganiello-deathstroke-now-a148623>