

Tommy Lee Edwards is perhaps best known for collaborating with Mark Millar on 1985 and with J. Michael Straczynski on Bullet Points over at Marvel before teaming up with British chat show host Jonathan Ross for their critically acclaimed limited series, Turf. Pitting gangsters, vampires and aliens all against one another, it makes for a fantastic read and should make for an even better film. Benderspink clearly agree with that last statement as they acquired the rights to the film in 2011. Here is an update on that project and further confirmation that a big screen adaptation of their new series, Golden Age, is also moving ahead. There was talk of Turf becoming a movie (directed by Matthew Vaughn). Can you give us an update on what is happening with the adaptation? We've got other plans for TURF right now, which are personally and professionally really exciting for me. More on that down
