

Last week, The Hollywood Reporter revealed that Syfy are working on a small screen adaptation of Booster Gold. Ordering a pilot script from Fringe writer Andrew Kreisberg, Greg Berlanti's production company is expected to oversee the project in association with Warner Horizon Television and DC Comics. After recently taking part in a lengthy interview with CBM, I reached out to creator Dan Jurgens to find out what he thinks about Booster Gold getting his own TV series. "I'm thrilled that Booster is on the verge of making the leap to television. It's a great concept for TV as the character himself would be very interested in getting on TV. You could build a lot of layers into it that would make for great fun." Dan recently told us that he was pleased with the character's portrayal on Smallville and I'm sure we'll hear even more from him on this version when the show

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=50411&t=font_color_redEXCLUSIVEfont_Booster_Gold_Creator_Dan_Jurgens_Share_s_His_Thoughts_On_Syfy's_Planned_TV_Series