

Graham Nolan on the left of the Bane cosplayer, and on the right is Chuck Dixon. In regards to Bane breaking Batman's back, was this a decision that was easily unanimous or were there some concerns between the creative staff? It was presented to us at a summit of Bat editors and Bat writers. Denny O'Neil laid it all out for us as a loose framework including the dramatic highpoints. Over the next couple of years we riffed off that first presentation but didn't vary from it much. What Denny presented that day was the spine for all that came next. If there was a dissenting voice, I never heard it. Do you think Nolan will take it to the point of breaking Batman's back on screen? No clue. From the latest trailer it certainly looks like there's a downfall coming for Bruce Wayne. But I'm guessing like everyone else. What is your favorite moment that

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/nailbiter111/news/?a=57183>