

Graham Nolan grew up between Long Beach, NY and Indian Harbour Beach, FL. For two years, he went to the Joe Kubert School of Cartoon and Graphic Art. Because he couldn't afford to graduate, he started working in advertising while waiting for his big break in comics. That break came at DC Comics when one of his teachers, Sal Amendola (who was the talent coordinator there) bought two of his school assignments to run in "New Talent Showcase." Soon after, he started picking up more assignments from DC, Marvel and Eclipse Comics eventually leading to a 6 year run illustrating Batman in "Detective Comics" and co-creating the villain, Bane. In 1998, he wrote, illustrated and self-published, "Monster Island." In 2000, he took over the syndicated comic-strip, "Rex Morgan, M.D." and the Sunday Phantom feature for King Features Syndicate. He has since dropped the Phantom to have more time to freelance in

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=56889>