

I've been lucky enough to have the chance to chat with Gene Fallaize, co-producer, writer, and director of the upcoming fan-film 'Superman: Requiem', and he talks about the choice of costume, the classic Superman theme, any cameos we may see, easter eggs hinting at other DC characters, and much more. What do you think it is that will set your fan-film apart from the hundreds we've seen before? I think it is because we have the benefit of having an almost exclusively professional cast and crew on board. Before this I'd never really heard of fan-films, but obviously I've been looking at a lot since Requiem came about, and there are some really great ones, and I admire them all for having the drive to get out there and make a fan-film, as they really aren't easy at all. Other fans want different things from fan films and can get quite upset when
