

What was it that made you realize you wanted to be a composer for television/film/video games/etc.? It was the Star Wars record that my dad bought for me! It was the first time I connected music with film and it dawned on me at that early age that music was being written specifically for film and television. I also remember watching many of the great 70's & 80's television shows and purposely listening to the music. I just started to notice it. Around the same time as the Star Wars record I started piano lessons and from that grew a great love for capturing moods on the piano. I was interested in the emotions and feelings the piano could conjure when played various ways. The idea of actually composing for a living in film/TV/games was a slower process. I knew I wanted to study music and compose for a living but
