

Known best to comic book fans for portraying The Incredible Hulk in the CBS television series of the same name from 1978 to 1982, Lou Ferrigno was kind enough to recently take the time to answer my questions about his latest projects. Having made a name for himself as a professional bodybuilder, Ferrigno would go on to star as Hercules in the 1983 film and later took on memorable comedic turns (playing himself) in the likes of The King of Queens and I Love You, Man. At the moment, the actor can be seen in short film Liberator (in which he once again takes on a heroic role) as well as voicing the Hulk in Joss Whedon's upcoming superhero ensemble, Marvel's The Avengers. He's also starring in NBC's Celebrity Apprentice, Sundays 9/8c. How exactly did you become involved with Liberator? I got a phone call from Jim Cirile and he told me

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=55846>