

We all know in the 1960's we had the Batman TV series on the small screen along with the 1966 movie but both were very campy and comical, nothing like the dark serious ones of today. What if Batman had been tested in a more serious live action way back then instead? With no relation to the Adam West version, I bring you my take. DIRECTOR: John Sturges If I want to make Batman seen the way he is in today's media you need to make the movie a true epic, nobody is better for that role than the director of the biggest epic of the decade, "The Great Escape". Sturges is one man that could pull this off. Visual Effects: Ray Harryhausen His visual effects are world renowned, creating creatures and effects for things such as "20 Million Miles to Earth" or "The Seventh Voyage of Sinbad" and later on he would create

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/TitanTower/news/?a=69388>