

We have seen a lot of early reactions for the upcoming movie adaptation of Edgar Rice Burrough's classic novel, John Carter, and mostly have been highly positive. This time, following the lifting of the embargo, the first full review of the film has been released, and it seems to confirm the praises the movie has been getting. Coming from Drew McWeeny of Hit Fix, check it out right below. John Carter is a charming science-fiction adventure that makes no apologies for what it is. This is the sort of film where there is talk of Jeddaks and Tharks and Barsoom and you're supposed to just pick it up and understand, and where we accept that Mars doesn't look a thing like modern science tells us it does because that's the conceit. It will be interesting to see who gets hung up on the difference between reality and this film's conception of

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Jolt17/news/?a=55618>