

With so many bad reviews hitting the web today/early last night, fans have been extremely nervous about how well Martin Campbell's Green Lantern just might do. It seems things with this movie have been a complete rollercoaster, in November everyone was terrified, then things calmed down, then we started getting some promo images and it was back to being terrified, then came the WonderCon footage and fans were excited once again, and then once the negative reviews started rolling in fans went back to that terrified stage, but is all lost for Green Lantern? Jordan Hoffman of UGO.com weighs in with his opinion on the super-hero film. "So, it was during this relentless blast of unselfconscious sci-fi/action plotting when I got completely tuned-in to Green Lantern's wavelength and realized this may very well be the most "comic book" of all comic book movies. Perhaps now's a good time to look in the mirror

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Dustin03Comics/news/?a=39476&t=First_Real_Positive_Review_For_Green_Lantern