

It should be great to watch Sylvester Stallone doing battle against Jason Momoa, his main nemesis in the flick. Normally I'd expect a Stallone movie to be the usual action movie that still finds a way to bore me, but with Walter Hill (48 Hrs) in the directing chair there is a shot that we might have something worth watching. ET's Nancy O'Dell was the first reporter to gain access to the set of Sylvester Stallone's new movie Bullet to the Head. Fans will be happy to see Sly in the same type of blood and guts action movie that he built his name on even after breaking his neck while shooting The Expendables. While filming the finale for The Expendables, "Stone Cold" Steve Austin was asked to tackle Stallone. In doing so, Stallone accidentally landed on a pile of bricks, which caused his injury. "It's never really the same," said Stallone, describing
