

Marko Djurdjevic worked with J. Michael Straczynski on a run of Thor comics a few years back. Apparently Djurdjevic is less than pleased with that experience and even less enthused about his experience working with J. Michael Straczynski. Here's what he had to say at FanExpo Canada: Hickman then asked a question of his own, specifically what Djurdjevic is working on now that he's not continuing with Marvel. Turns out, the artist is working on video games, and art direction; rather than comics – which he's very happy about. Djurdjevic is also trying to get Matt Fraction to write a game, he said. Epting then asked whether he regretted not doing more interiors for Marvel, to which Djurdjevic said, "They never put me on a book with a writer that I wanted. They always gave me Straczynski, and that guy writes like toilet paper." Continuing on, asked how Straczynski writes scripts,

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=45310&t=Former_Marvel_Artist_Marko_Djurdjevic_Has_Very_Unkind_Words_For_Marvel_And_Writer_J_Michael_Straczynski