

Nothing against the other contenders but Aaron Paul is a superb actor and the Die Hard franchise would be crazy to pass on him. He is a feisty little ball of energy. And has a smoldering intensity that rises to the surface like steam from a boiling pot. He recently won a well deserved Emmy for his portrayal of Jesse Pinkman in AMC's brilliant show, Breaking Bad. He is an actor that plays much bigger than his small frame would have you believe, he spits out his dialogue with sheer venom when he needs to be tough and nasty. While he also has the ability to show a softer gentler side that is so astonishingly good it actually makes the viewer sympathetic to a criminal, methamphetamine cook. In the young actor category, a role to die for is John McClane Jr, the son of Bruce Willis' indestructible cop character in A Good
