

Just the other day Latino Review had reported that there was trouble with the script for David Slade's Daredevil and that 20th Century Fox was actively searching for a new screenwriter. An according to Deadline that David James Kelly has been hired to rewrite the reboot of Daredevil. The little-known writer is best known for polishing the script of the now in hiatus live-action Akira. The Plot - Reports have the studio working off the Frank Miller/David Mazzucchelli story arc Born Again, as The Kingpin uncovers the superhero's secret identity, and uses it to turn blind lawyer Matt Murdoch's life upside down. Variety's Jeff Sneider has tweeted an intriguing message: I know who ACTUALLY saved Fox's DAREDEVIL reboot with a 3-week rewrite that convinced the studio to renew its option on the rights. #OTR :)— Jeff Sneider (@TheInSneider) April 28, 2012 #OTR means off the record, and not a clue as I had

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/nailbiter111/news/?a=58744>