

"One batch, two batch, penny and dime." Jon Bernthal's portrayal of Frank Castle was far-and-away the breakout performance of Daredevil season two, and in fact, Bernthal was so good that Marvel/Netflix decided to fast-track his very own spin-off series, titled The Punisher, which is due out in the fourth quarter of the 2017 calendar year, barring any unexpected delays. The series is currently filming in New York and a whole new batch of set photos has just surfaced featuring The Punisher getting into a bit of a tussle with local law enforcement. Unsurprisingly, he does gain the upper hand and by the end of the brief altercation, he has successfully commandeered the officer's vehicle. Now, as for where he's going with the vehicle, that's anyone's guess and something we likely won't learn more about till next winter. The images are copyrighted, so you'll have to head over to ComingSoon to check out the full gallery: New photos of @jonnybernthals Frank Castle in action on The Punisher

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/punisher/frank-castle-commandeers-a-police-car-in-these-action-packed-new-set-a148780>