

We've known for quite some time that both Chris Pratt (Passengers) and Bryce Dallas Howard (Black Mirror) would return for a second go-round with the prehistoric in the 2018 sequel to their mega-blockbuster Jurassic World. We were still awaiting word on any other returning cast members, but after Jake Johnson (The Mummy) revealed last month he was unlikely to reprise his scene-stealing role as Lowery, it did seem for a moment that Pratt & Howard might be the only two familiar faces making their way back as the story begins to shift away from the actual theme park. However, according to a new interview, that no longer seems to be the case. When asked by Cinema Blend whether or not B.D. Wong (Jurassic Park; Gotham) would return as the twisted geneticist Dr. Henry Wu for the upcoming sequel, executive producer Frank Marshall coyly replied: "When they take off in helicopters, you know they're probably going to come back." It's not exactly a confirmation, but

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/sci-fi/jurassic_park/frank-marshall-strongly-suggests-bd-wong-will-return-for-the-a147137