

Roughly 2 weeks ago, the attached director of 20th Century Fox's long productive Daredevil reboot, David Slade, hinted that news was soon coming, though soon after it was revealed that it wasn't much "news" at all. Despite that however, The Hollywood Reporter has now learned who'll pen the reboot's script, as well what story arc the film will be adapted from. Brad Caleb Kane, a writer-producer on cult Fox TV show Fringe, has been hired to pen the franchise's relaunch, which has high ambitions: Kane is being asked to adapt one of the most influential and acclaimed comic stories of all time, Frank Miller and David Mazzucchelli's "Born Again" run from Daredevil. Despite the studio rebooting the franchise, the "Born Again" story arc was expected to be used in the sequel to the Ben Affleck-starrer, with director Mark Steven Johnson showing interest in the storyline. Frank Miller's "Born Again" story arc details Murdock's

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=38977&:t=iFringe Screenwriter Penning iDaredevil Reboot Story Arc Adapted From Revealed