

I won't be doing a full recap of this week's episode "The Prince Of Winterfell", but I will say that I was a little disappointed with it. It was still decent - I really don't think there could ever be a flat out bad ep of this show given the talent involved - but seemed quite happy to be filler, and act as a calm before the storm as we approach next week's highly anticipated battle. That's fine of course, all shows have those type of episodes, but I think I was just expecting a bit more from it given how strong the two previous weeks have been. I also had a few issues with some changes made to the book - not really a big deal, but we were robbed of a couple of potentially great fight scenes as well as what I always felt to be Arya's defining moment
